The Cycle Project is comprised of photographic suites that intersect thematically. Each suite acts as a component meant to address varying themes in the process of mourning. This project is a result of using photography as a tool for coping with death. These images are intended to be universally approachable, however in the context of the entire project they become autobiographical. Above all else though, these images are a representation of mood.
